International Environmental Law – Distance Programs

Macquarie Law School’s Centre for International and Environmental Law was one of Australia’s first centres to specialise in environmental law. The Centre’s research and teaching is enhanced by its members enjoying a wide range of experience in legal practice and academic expertise in environmental law and related areas.

The Centre currently offers four postgraduate programs via distance mode:

• Master of International Environmental Law (MIEL)
• Postgraduate Diploma in International Environmental Law
• Postgraduate Certificate in International Environmental Law

These programs are designed to meet the needs of graduates looking to specialise in their studies, lawyers seeking to improve their credentials in international environmental law and also non-lawyer professionals who work in government, in international development and aid programs, non-governmental organisations and intergovernmental organisations addressing environment and resources, and private industries with businesses dealing with international resources.

• Master of Laws in International Environmental Law (LLM)

This program is available to lawyers wishing to specialise in international environmental law. The degree will be particularly useful in providing international and comparative studies across a wide range of environmental law.

Resources and Support for Distance Students

There is a high level of support for distance students. Academic staff are available by email, fax, and telephone. Our Student Services staff are able to deal with the administrative and practical needs of distance students, and students have access to a wide range of resources. Students who enrol in these programs are required to attend short intensive teaching sessions on campus each semester.

Graduating students are welcome to attend their graduation ceremony in Sydney. The status of degrees awarded to students who study by distance is equal to those awarded to students who study on-campus. For students who cannot attend, degrees are conferred at the ceremony in absentia.
